Dear Sir/Madam

Based on my involvement to date I think and would like to see that the verification of a person's identity each time it is required be made a whole lot simpler to supply or obtain. This could be done by using the Real Me identification system and the government legislating that all businesses/organisations accept (even as an option) this to identify people. Effectively it will be like becoming a national ID system/card.

The partners of our firm (chartered accountants) experience a lot of frustration from the time wasted continually supplying identification documentation to banks, investment advisors etc.

Yours sincerely

David Quinn
